ARCHIVES WEEK 2012

Archives Week 2012 will be celebrated February 5 to 11.

Saskatchewan's first Archives Week was celebrated in 2006. Why even have an archives week?

(From the letter sent by the SCAA to provincial heritage minister Joan Beatty, November 2005....)

One thing we have learned from the Centennial year just passing is that the memories of Saskatchewan's many achievements are well documented by its archival record. Historical texts, photographs, films, audio recordings and other archival material have been key resources in the telling of our story. Books such as Saskatchewan: A New History and the Encyclopedia of Saskatchewan, as well as numerous documentary films, newspaper articles and television advertisements could not have been produced without this province's archival institutions.

But few of the people reading those books or watching those documentaries ever stop to consider the historical records that went into making them, or the work that is done to ensure that those records are acquired, preserved and made available. Saskatchewan has over 40 established archival institutions. Saskatchewan's archivists have preserved millions of photographic images, gigabytes of electronic records and thousands of hours of audio recordings and moving images. They have also been at the forefront of technology-enhanced access to those records. Saskatchewan leads the country in producing the greatest number of "virtual exhibits," many of which have K-12 educational components. These provide instant access to key photographs and valuable documents. Saskatchewan archivists argued for and helped to develop Archives Canada - a national database of archival information. Provincially, we have developed an on-line database of textual records as well as being the first province to initiate an on-line provincial photograph database.

In honour of our province's heritage and the work that has gone into ensuring its preservation, and to promote the role of archives in society, we ask that Saskatchewan establish an "Archives Week" similar to those celebrated by the provinces of British Columbia and Alberta. It would fall during the week of February 8, to coincide with the birthday of Edmund H. Oliver, who was the first professor of history at the University of Saskatchewan, and arguably the father of archives in this province.

We believe such recognition is well deserved. It will foster our identity and pride in our past with displays and special events. It will help elevate the role of our province's archival institutions as keepers of authentic evidence of our past, keeping archives on our map!
