Water and energy are closely interlinked and interdependent. Energy generation and transmission requires utilization of water resources, particularly for hydroelectric, nuclear, and thermal energy sources. Conversely, about 8% of the global energy generation is used for pumping, treating and transporting water to various consumers.

In 2014, the UN System – working closely with its Member States and other relevant stakeholders – is collectively bringing its attention to the water-energy nexus, particularly addressing inequities, especially for the 'bottom billion' who live in slums and impoverished rural areas and survive without access to safe drinking water, adequate sanitation, sufficient food and energy services. It also aims to facilitate the development of policies and cross-cutting frameworks that bridge ministries and sectors, leading the way to energy security and sustainable water use in a green economy. Particular attention will be paid to identifying best practices that can make a water-and energy-efficient 'Green Industry' a reality.

Some facts & figures on world water:

- ◆ Hydroelectricity is the largest renewable source for power generation and its share in total electricity generation is expected to remain around 16% through 2035.
- ◆ For developing countries alone $103 billion per year are required to finance water, sanitation and wastewater treatment through 2015.
- ◆ In Stockholm, public buses, waste collection trucks and taxis run on bio-gas produced from sewage treatment plants.
- ◆ More than 1.3 billion people still lack access to electricity, and roughly 2.6 billion use solid fuels (mainly biomass) for cooking.
- ◆ Wind power is the most sustainable source of renewable energy, mainly because of its low greenhouse gas emissions and water consumption.
- ◆ Approximately 15–18 billion m3 of freshwater resources are contaminated by fossil fuel production every year.
- ◆ The installed worldwide geothermal electricity capacity could be increased from the current 10 GW to 70 GW with present technology, and to 140 GW with enhanced technology.

How do you confuse an Irishman? Put two shovels against a wall and tell him to take his pick!

What do you call an Irishman who has been dead for fifty years? Peat!
