BUFFALO ERA

Native people relied completely on the buffalo and faced starvation as the population declined. Who would have dreamed that could happen when as late as 1865 traders and trappers recorded seeing huge herds that stretched from horizon to horizon. By 1878 remnants of the once great herds were congregated around Fort Walsh and vicinity in the Cypress Hills, in the Milk River and farther south. By 1879 even those in the Cypress Hills were gone; the last one was reportedly shot in 1880 in the vicinity of Fort Walsh.
