After serving as Premier of Saskatchewan for nearly 10 years, Premier Brad Wall announced that he will be retiring from the position and elected politics when his party elects a new Leader. Premier Wall had this to say about his retirement, and of the record of the government since first being elected to office in 2007:

"This November will mark 10 years since I had the incredible honour of being elected as Premier of this wonderful province that I love. I've always thought that the 10-year mark - should I be so fortunate to serve that long - might be the right time to reevaluate. Together with Tami, I have decided that now is the time for renewal - for my party, for the government, for the province. It's time for me to retire from politics.

And so I've asked the Saskatchewan Party to begin the process of electing a new leader, who will become the next Premier. I'll continue to serve as Premier until the new leader is chosen. And until then, there's still a lot of work to do. And we carry out that work in a Saskatchewan much stronger after a decade of growth. I will be forever grateful that I had the opportunity to play some small part in all of that.

This decade of growth truly is a strong foundation upon which to build. I believe, though, that to best ensure continued success in that work, Saskatchewan needs renewal, a fresh perspective in leadership. This was such a difficult decision to make. It is hard to lay this duty down, to retire from what has been and what will always be the honour of my working life."
