Harvest is underway across the RM of Reno, having started at the end of July or beginning of August for some producers; others were just getting going when the rain began falling last Friday. Completion rates vary then from 100% down to less than 10%.

Yields vary as well. Depending on the crop, producers are reporting a lot of average to above average yields which is great considering the shortage of rainfall this summer.

The rain over the last week definitely helps lower the fire risk but hopefully will not significantly downgrade the quality of the crops left to harvest.
